Pia Henseler has been advising individual and corporate clients for over five years on their immigration-options to South Africa. The majority of her clients are corporates who have an existing business in South Africa and are battling to find the right skills from within the local labour market. With the help of Pia's advice they are recruiting foreign experts to fill the positions. Other corporates are setting up a new business or branch in South Africa and require Pia's network of expertise to set up the operations, make sure that they comply with all relevant local legislation and transfer existing staff to the new South African site once that is up and running.

Her professional experiences, in the areas of marketing, tax and international human resources consulting, have been with multi-national companies such as IBM, TRW, Barclays and KPMG LLP. As a result of her consulting experience, Fiona has built a network of relationships with members of the French public administration, and she has sharpened her knowledge of the immigration process and requirements in France. Through her own personal experience, and her experience helping many international assignees who have come to live and work in France, Fiona fully understands the difficulties that face an expatriate arriving in France for an assignment. Tapping into this unfulfilled need in today's marketplace has led her to develop services to assist international companies - and expatriates themselves - with their immigration applications, ensuring rapid turnaround. She founded Expat Partners in 2003 to provide full immigration services to the Global Mobility Directors seeking assistance.
